THE CAMPAIGN.

— “KEEPING ON PROMISES”

The leader of the State Opposition addressed a crowded meeting in the Paddington Town hall last night in support of the candidature of the selected Liberal, Alderman Reg. Harrison. Mayor (Alderman M. Kerrigan) presided. Mr. Wade, who was received with much enthusiasm, said it was just three years ago that he last stood on the same platform and that he was glad to be able to do so again. He urged support on behalf of Mr. (the Mayor) Oakes. Mr. Oakes was turned down.

He supported the candidature of Alderman Harris.

ment. (Cheers.) It was only necessary for me to read the Premier's speech of last week to see the same feature which characterised its administration for the last three years—extravagance. (Hear, hear.) The Labour party was again appealing for a vote on the ground that there were still maintenance trusts and combines which should be repressed. (Hear, hear.) What the Labour Ministry been doing during the last three years. Had they not been living to control the combines which were founded so fiercely three years ago. For years the Labour party had lived on promises, and at last—three years ago—reached the goal of their ambition. Their voices:—What are you going to do? Mr. Wade: Turn them out with the help of a million people throughout the State. (A murmur.)

The Holman Ministry had promised to dig rockchoppers and quarrymen within the continued Mr. Wages, "and later, when I was in the office that had not been done. And the first thing he could not help referring to was the passing was the Labour Ministry's proposal to fix a minimum wage for women workers by statute. (Hear, hear.) That proposal had not been kept. The women workers could not approach the Court themselves because they were not organised. (Hear, hear.) The Labour Ministry had said that because the women belonged to a union they should not obtain redress at the hands of the Court."

"Wade! You may call a quill sign, or all it cruel." (Cheers.) But now the Labour party promised to pass legislation for the Wade Government passed through the House of Commons three years ago, and which was repealed by the Conservative Government. The record of the Conservative Government was one of promises, (Hear, hear.) Was the one in the audience who could point to a substantial plank in the Labour platform that had been placed on the Statute Book during the last five years? (A voice: None.)

"SIMPLY FARFICAL."

Wade said the only commonsense way of dealing with the problem was to build more houses, and the only way to do that was to get more men here to build them. (Cheers.) Mr. McGowan had declared that every man that came here took the bread out of another man's mouth. (Voices: "No, no.") And the scarcity of houses continued. (Hear, hear.) The remedy offered by the Holman ministry was simply farcical. (Cheers.) Greenville had been proved a stupendous failure. Although the lowest rent there was $100, and there were cottages for which twelve months showed a loss of £300,000. That was a monstrous thing that with the necessities which New South Wales people need there should be a deficit of over £900,000. That shortage would have to be made up from the people in taxation. (Heard.) "If such things happened in years of prosperity what will happen if we have a bad year? (Cheers.) Nine years ago—in 1904—our people were faced with a similar proposition—extravagance and deficits."

conditions which obtained when the Wade agreement was in power—safe finance and no consuls. There could be no real progress in this State under the principles which have governed the Labour party in the past—their methods of the caucus. (Hear, heard.) My voice: What are you governed by? Mr. Wade: "My conscience only." Dealings in the Norton Griffiths agreement. Mr. Wade said that although Mr. McGirr, M.L.A., had denounced the proposal, when the division was taken in the House the member for Yaffa voted for the acceptance of the Norton Griffiths agreement.

voice: What did Mr. Fell do?
Mr. Wade: The member for Lane Cove had been in the agreement, and did not vote
first it; but he had not been censured by the Liberal party. He (Mr. Wade) asked the electors to vote for the party of freedom of press, and Liberalism. (Cheers.)

the course of a brief address, Alderman Harris said that to the older generation it was known through his father, who had represented the people in Parliament and the municipal council. To the young generation he was known as a "good sport" who had always played the game." He added to Parliament he would play the game of politics just as fairly.

visit to Melbourne in order to address the people of his old electorate, mentioned although the Eight-hours Bill and other legislative measures were under consideration. The State Labour Government, there was of course no assurance which was treated more kindly, and through. That was the bill "by which members increased their own salaries (laughter and cheers.)"

CHARGE AGAINST LIBER
LABOUR PARTY'S AIMS.
GLEN INNES, Monday.
Mr. Trefle, speaking at Deepwater on Saturday night, said that the conservative party was the greatest parcel of contradictions that he had ever had. Some years ago, during Wade's government, improvement loans and Wyalong. The then member for the district (the late Mr. Kelly), supported by the Labour party, protested vigorously against the locking-up of lands, instead of taking the railway into it and making it available for settlement. Recently, Mr. Treffe resumed negotiations for leases between Wyalong and the Government for closer settlement. The Liberals, though their deputy-leader, protested against the action. In the last session of Parliament they submitted to both Houses a bill the approval to build the railway. From making these lands available in agricultural areas, every Liberal in the Upper House, including two ex-Ministers of the War Department, voted against the railways, and defeated it on top of all this, Mr. Wade coolly said in a Chatswood speech that this country requires opening up by railways. Every action of the conservative party up to the present has been in the direction of locking this country up indefinitely, while every action of the Liberal party has been in the direction of opening it up.

field for thousands of prosperous homes. Making it a more fruitful, and healthful, place to-day at Wellington, the Minister for Lands dwelt upon the great benefit the country would reap if the proposed Land Settlement Bill, which was passed by the Legislative Assembly, became
